Police Officers Fight Dismissal

Officers Earle Wermuth and Leslie Overhulse, given notice that they would be dropped from the Carmel police force Nov. 1, were preparing yesterday to fight dismissal in court, while Police Chief Robert A. Norton, told to let them go by the council on Tuesday, was left with full responsibility when the council decided on Wednesday night that hiring and firing is a matter for the police chief. The chief, on the other hand, is reported to believe that the men, having been fired at the order of the council, can only be reinstated by the council.

Former City Attorney Argyll Campbell, Ralph O. Marron and Capt. Shelburn Robison have been retained by Wermuth and Overhulse to try to save them their jobs. Wermuth has been in the service of the city for nine years, Overhulse more than a year and a half.

The double firing came as a complete surprise on Wednesday morning long after the necessity for dropping one man became apparent because of a $3000 slash in the police budget this year.

Reported cause for this double-action lies in the expected appointment of a new officer to complete a four-man force.

Although Overhulse has been on the force longer than Officer Robert Walton, the latter came from San Jose police school, trained for operation of the police radio system.

Hiring and firing of police personnel is the business of the police chief and not of the council, City Attorney William Luis Hudson and members of the council made clear at Wednesday night's meeting, and Mayor Herbert Heron and Police Commissioner Everett Smith thereupon emphasized that hiring or firing of members of his staff would be the responsibility of Chief of Police Norton.

This declaration, coming after Norton, according to report, had specifically been ordered to let two men go, Wermuth and Overhulse, placed Norton literally on the spot.

Oil Station Hearing Set October 18

M. J. Murphy, Inc., wants a service station at the southwest corner of Junipero and Ocean avenue. Mrs. Mary O. Goold, who first signed the petition for a hearing and then wrote the council to register a change of heart, isn't so certain she wants Murphy to build an oil station diagonally opposite her block where Hodge's stables are now located.

Request for a hearing was read at Wednesday's council meeting and a hearing was set for Wednesday, Oct. 18, at 7:45 p. m.

City Attorney William Luis Hudson indicated sufficient signatures were on the petition.

BUSINESS GROUP MEETS

The Carmel Business Association will meet next Thursday evening at La Playa Hotel. This will be a dinner meeting. Entertainment is promised.

Rebuilding Community Church Gets Under Way

Contract for the remodeling of the Carmel Community Church was let this week and work begun with the felling of the great pine trees which stood by the original church building since it was erected in 1905.

From a preview of architect's plans as drawn by Robert Stanton for the Carmel Community Church, the result will greatly enhance Lincoln street, already a show street of Carmel.

The old structure of frame and shingle will give way to a graceful stucco building with timbered entrance on Lincoln, a copper-covered bell tower, in which will hang the original bell which has called worshippers for the past 35 years to the Community Church, and an addition if sufficient funds are made available.

The present contract is for $18,500, of which approximately $5000 is yet to be made up, according to Mrs. Everett Smith, member of the board of trustees, who is acting as publicity chairman.

In place of the aged pine trees which were brought down by Del Monte Forester Everett Smith, new trees will be planted. The felling of these trees marked the "go" signal of rebuilding this week.

The shell of the present building will be used with the front part brought closer to the Lincoln street line. Graceful lines will be given by the buttressed effect on the forward gabled end. Possibility was a bas-relief on this front wall is indicated, although so far it is still merely in the form of a suggested ornament.

The interior will be worked out to include some rare old Italian panelling which will adorn the west wall. Preliminary sketches also show recessed windows giving an air of depth and solidity to the walls.

The congregation is now meeting at the Carmel Girl Scout House on Sixth near Lincoln street, and will continue to do so for the next four months, the time allotted for the reconstruction. Rev. Wilber W. McKee has now returned to conduct services as usual.

The Carmel Community Church trustees are Victor Graham, E. Frederick Smith, Alfred Matthews, Mrs. G. W. Beardsley and Mrs. Everett Smith.

Mrs. Beardsley is chairman of the building committee which includes Alfred Matthews and E. Frederick Smith.

Additional building funds are still being collected and further donations will be gladly receiveed.

Pioneers Figure In Ocean Avenue Sale As Mary Dummage Buys Slevin Building

Quietly, almost in secret, the Ocean avenue property of one Carmel business pioneer, Louis L. Slevin, was sold this week to another pioneer, Mrs. Mary L. Dummage, owner of extensive business area property in Carmel.

At the same time Slevin, who has outlived or outlasted probably all his contemporaries in Carmel business of 1905, the year he built the Slevin building on the south side of Ocean avenue west of Dolores street, indicated that he would retire within a short time.

That he would sell his store and end of his active career, Slevin announced sadly as he surveyed an Ocean avenue that has changed greatly within the 35 years that Slevin's Stationery Store has served the Carmel public.

In the early days it was Carmel's post office. Slevin was encouraged to come here by the offer of being Carmel's first postmaster. The mail drop slot is still to be seen in the front door.

Mr and Mrs. Slevin will continue to reside in the home they built on Carmelo street near Ocean avenue many years ago.

During his long business career, Slevin has been a professional photographer, and his collection of photographs includes many of the San Francisco waterfront before the fire and of the old clipper ships that called at that port in the last days of sail.

In Carmel he made a most complete record of all old Carmelites, including such early business personalities as Frank Powers and Frank Devendorf, original subdividers of Carmel; "Doc" Beck, who died last year; Joe Hand, who had been a Pony Express rider before he entered the real estate and laundry business in Carmel; and the Schweningers, early grocers; and Gus Englund, first marshal and original strong arm of the law.

Mrs. Dummage, who assumes ownership, has other business property on Ocean avenue and Dolores street, and is the sister of Mrs. Philip Wilson, Sr. She is the mother of Police Chief Robert A. Norton and first came to Carmel to reside in 1903. Just before the end of the last century she arrived on the peninsula, making her home first in Pacific Grove.

At the time both Slevin and Mrs. Dummage first bought Carmel business lots, these could be had for a few hundred dollars. Today similar prices per front foot would be considered as bargains.

James Thoburn handled the deal.

Remodelling of the building is expected to remove the last remaining old-time wooden false-front building on Ocean avenue. Mrs. Dummage owns adjoining property, including two lots on Dolores and two on Lincoln immediately back of the Ocean avenue lots and altogether four front lots on Ocean in this block.

Mrs. Jas. L. Cockburn left Thursday to attend an M. R. A. meeting in Sonoma.

:-: IN INTRODUCTION :-:

With this issue of The Pine Cone, your newspaper changes ownership and comes under new editorial direction. At such a time it is incumbent upon the new owner and publisher to make plain to the readers of his newspaper his policies and the principles which govern his thinking habits.

Perhaps, though, he may be forgiven if first he expresses his gratitude at the good fortune which makes it possible for him to take up his life in Carmele and to follow in the footsteps of many illustrious predecessors. Carmel to your editor is the ultimate in a life that has been aimed at pleasant, satisfactory and useful living rather than the accumulation of wealth.

Your editor does not take up his work with The Pine Cone as a lark, as a carefree phase of his life, but rather as the opportunity to pursue his profession under ideal circumstances. In his fondest dreams, he could not have asked for more pleasant surroundings in which to make himself a member of the community. To him The Pine Cone and Carmel are a means to a useful, profitable existence. He does not ask a municifient return from ownership of The Pine Cone, but he does expect of it a comfortable livelihood for his wife, himself and his three children.

At the same time, he recognizes fully his obligation to the people and merchants of Carmel. He appreciates fully that The Pine Cone has a history of leadership. That leadership at times has waned, but to the new editor of your newspaper it represents a task to be carried on.

You will understand that at first unfamiliarity with local problems will prevent your newspaper from taking an active stand on current issues. But please keep in mind that ignorance, not fear, prompts that reticence. Your editor is an opinionated person, who will freely express his views. It is to be hoped that those views will meet with the favor of the people of Carmel. Nevertheless, your editor will express them, with his reasons for so doing, and he only asks that you regard them as honest conclusions, honestly arrived at in the hope of being of service to the community.

On the broader problems of state, national and international affairs your editor has already formed definite conclusions. He will air those views in your newspaper. They are based, to a large extent, on his daily repeated prayer of thankfulness that he is a citizen of the United States.

To him the heritage of freedom in this country is something to be prized above all other earthly things. He is an ardent believer in the ultimate value and good of a democratic form of government. He loathes in all forms foreign theories which would replace the type of government for which the founders of our country gave their lives.

Your editor freely admits that our democracy is now undregoing a series of necessary changes. Yet he denies that the essential form of our government can ever be changed and remain within the boundaries of freedom and enterprise that are only American. Fascism, Communism and the other -isms are anathema to your editor.

As a matter of fact, one of his most staunchly held views is that no kind of formula or panacea can cure any of the ills which beset this or any other nation. It is only hard work, an honest-to-God recognition of our problems which will enable us to solve them. There is no easy way to riches, no flower-strewn path to the idyllic life, in the opinion of your editor. The arithmetic table is unrepealable. The law that you pay for what you get (or you get what you pay for) has as yet not been proved unsound.

But it is fully recognized that our civilization is not static, that the things in politics and finance which a decade ago were accepted as right are not in all cases still right. This is a changing world. But it must change within the broad limits of our democratic form of government. It is your editor's bounden conviction that that form of government is the only one that permits a natural growth without disruption of existing rights and privileges. In all things, so long as The Pine Cone is owned by him, your editor intends to write and express himself so as best to keep alive his deeply-rooted faith in democracy as we of the United States are fortunate to know it.

Thus, for the time being, the new editor of The Carmel Pine Cone, a newspaper which has behind it almost a quarter of a century of honorable history, leaves himself in the hands of the good citizens of Carmel, confident he will be forgiven those errors of omission and transgression which come from one working hard to acquaint himself with a new job and a new community.

Carmel Calls Them Back; Charles Van Wyck Brooks One of Many Who Answered Cry in Their Hearts

By FRANCIS L. LLOYD

Many years ago, old Carmelites will recall, Van Wyck Brooks, since risen to literary fame with such excellent writing as "The Flowering of New England", lived in Carmel.

It was in Carmel, in the spring of 1911 that he married Eleanor Kenyon, daughter of John Ward Stimson. He was then an instructor in English at Stanford University. He was a young man of 35, who had graduated several years before from Harvard. In at least one previous job he had been associated with the world of letters, for he worked for Doubleday, Doran & Company in 1908-09.

While he was still an instructor at Palo Alto, a son was born, Charles Van Wyck Brooks. Later, when he had returned to the East, another son was born, Oliver Kenyon Brooks.

For several years, the Brooks family returned to Carmel, and about the time of the war they were a familiar sight to old Carmelites, tramping, the four of them, up Ocean avenue from the beach. Young Van Wyck Brooks then was a tidily dressed, almost dapper man who parted his hair down the middle.

The last time all four members of the Brooks family were in Carmel was in 1922. The elder son was then ten years of age.

This week Charles Brooks returned to Carmel, seeking here the beauty and simple atmosphere he recalled from years of childhood. He also brought his wife, who is a painter under the name of Inez Seibert Brooks.

Mr. and Mrs. Brooks have been guests this week of Mrs. Theodore Criley of Carmel Highlands. Although they are leaving Carmel for a while to live in Bolinas, on the Marin county coast, they plan to make their home permanently in California and to visit Carmel as often as possible.

Since 1922, the Van Wyck Brooks family has resided in Westport, Conn. The writer never took another teaching job after leaving Stanford to go east to write.

He was associated with the Century Co., publishers, from 1915 to 1918, and then was associate editor of The Freeman from 1920 to 1924.

Not long after graduating from Harvard, Author Brooks published his first book, "The Wine of the Puritans", in 1909. Then followed "The Malady of the Ideal", "John Addington Symonds", "The World of H. G. Wells", "America's Coming-of-Age", all before leaving the Pacific Coast, and then, in 1918, "Letters and Leadership", "The Ordeal of Mark Twain" in 1920, "The Pilgrimage of Henry James", "Emerson and Others", and most recently "The Flowering of New England", the history of American literature.

Van Wyck Brooks is now near completion of his second volume of this history of literature, which Charles Brooks says may be out soon, and which will bring the history down to world war time.

Although his friends have thought he was writing a book, Charles Brooks declined to admit he was doing anything at the moment, but it is still a possibility that he may in some fashion follow in his father's footsteps. His brother, Oliver, is now living in New York City and is an art student.

Now that Charles Brooks has answered that call in his heart to return to Carmel and the Pacific Coast, perhaps someday his father will return to the grown-up town where as a yet struggling writer and an English instructor, he spent many happy days.

Quick Action Ordered In Mission and 8th Street School Zone

Last week's Pine Cone pointed out the danger to Carmel school children in the traffic situation at the corner of Mission and Eighth streets.

On Wednesday evening, Mayor Herbert Heron instructed Police Chief Robert A. Norton, who had suggested some protection to a former council, to arrange with the school board for marking the intersection.

School Trustee Peter Mawdsley presented a request of his board for action.

A truck accident at that corner prompted the Pine Cone's request that something be done.

Mr. and Mrs. Eric Tyrrell-Martin have returned to their Pebble Beach home from New York. While in the East Mr. Tyrrell-Martin played on the winning team in the United States Open Polo Tournament.

Dr. Cadman In Analysis Of America's Prospects

America has but one choice IF the Germans and Russians have really entered into an alliance and that is the protection of the future of human liberties against the arbitrary and autocratic totalitarian states. She has the right to wait until she is sure that this is the issue, then she must assume the responsibility of a democracy, the responsibility of her creed of freedom. Already America's spirit is non-partisan rather than neutral as regards the European war and although her feeling is overwhelming for peace, slowly it is changing, as has been shown by the recent Gallup polls on the repeal of the arms embargo. These were the statements made by Dr. Paul Cadman in his talk on "Recent Alignments in the European Crisis", before the Carmel Woman's Club on Monday afternoon.

America has always stood for freedom and freedom is costly, he said. In striving to maintain it she has had to make choices and assume the consequence and responsibilities. It is for her now to look to the European situation for signs which threaten her heritage and rightly interpret the alliances now being formed in Europe which may vitally effect her life and culture and freedom, according to Dr. Cadman. There are in the world today three great democracies, England, France and the United States. These countries recognize individual rights, both of men and of organizations, and they allow for the development of the personality. Opposed to the democracies are the great totalitarian states which demand the "total citizen", mind, body and soul. They will not allow individual thought, acts, or worship. These arbitrary and autocratic countries are Germany, Italy, Japan and Russia.

On considering them, Germany would at first seem to be the only one that fully controlled the total citizen. On closer examination it is revealed that Italy, seemingly a great religious country, has so governed the thinking of her people that she has crippled their spiritual life. Japan has so regimented her citizens for her program of imperial expansion that she has controlled their thinking and behavior and spiritual life.

Russia, Dr. Cadman stated, has effected an industrial and political revolution, but in the development of her people toward a greater personal liberty than ever before she has controlled them utterly until their vision is lost in the present state of totalitarianism.

It is two of these states that present the enigma confronting America today. Have the Germans and Russians really formed a military alliance or is it but an entente?

Dr. Cadman emphasized that this Russo-German entente must be thoroughly analyzed to judge its effect on American liberties. In the light of conflicting statements of Hitler in "Mein Kampf" and of the American Russian bulletin of Aug. 20, which presented the Russian views, it would seem to be an impossible alliance.

Hitler has stated that "conclusion of a treaty with Russia means a declaration of war. Its outcome would be defeat for Germany . . . one does not conclude a treaty with one whose interest is to destroy his partner." On the other hand the Russians have professed themselves as the champions of liberty and willing to aid the "victims of aggression." What then of Poland?

In defense of this latter seeming departure from the Russian purpose, what is to be offered? The theory is propounded that Russia, having offered to aid Czecho-Slovakia and being repulsed, has swung toward Germany. But, according to Dr. Cadman, neither Stalin or Hitler is to be trusted. The present entente means nothing; it is the so-called friendship of two nations at each other's throats and who have spent the past decade reviling each other. In one country communistic thought has been forcibly repressed and in the other a "purge" took place among the highest officers of the army—as in the case of Tucharchesky "purged" for fostering the idea of an alliance which in the present volte-face has been ratified by Stalin.

Keeping these facts in mind, said Dr. Cadman, it would not seem to be a struggle for human liberties in Europe, but rather the union of two enemies for the destruction of each other.

Russia may have decided to take all she can get under the existing circumstances and, having absorbed Bessarabia , Roumania, Lithuania, Esthonia, the Baltic states, dominate European politics and stand ready to throw her weight either way. It may be Russia's move to stop German advances; it may be a rebirth of the Russian imperialistic dream or of Russian nationalism.

Whatever the underlying motive, how does it ecect America? Whatever it may mean to either Germany or Russia, even though it may be "the zenith of perfidy", it is the union of the two most powerful forces in the world. Russia's army of 4,000,000 men is the greatest ever in the world and over these men she exercises complete control. She can maneuver to hold the whip hand over England and France, influence the Black Sea region and control the Dardanelles. She can cut off supplies from central Europe. If she stands by Germany, she can send her great manpower into the west and Germany will be a greater threat than at any time since Bismarck. If the Soviets and Germany really are in league, all of central Europe will be on their side against England and France and possibly Portugal. Again Russia may decide to withdraw from the west, as she has done before. The key to the world situation is what comes next in Europe; what move Russia will make.

While America is supposedly neutral, in reality she is non-partisan. Her sympathies are with England and France. Business, contrary to popular belief, does not want war. Nor do people want war. The Americans are volatile and emotional. In the last war Wilson was elected in November on a peace platform and in April of the following year he led the people to war. Gradually America is realizing that underlying all superfluous diplomacy in Europe is the struggle between the free and the arbitrary forms of government. We, in America, still have the right to think; there is no censorship; we can do, and stand, and fall by our own personal judgment; we can worship freely. Will we in the light of a German-Russo alliance, which threatens to wipe out the countries preserving human liberties, stand aside and become the victims of the resultant trials and tribulations? asked the speaker.

To quote Dr. Cadman: "We have a great stake in the preservation and the future of the British Empire because the parliamentary-democratic form of government requires and lives by opposition and has regard for minority opiinon. American interest in the outcome of this war, therefore, will be in the survival of parliamentary government. When that interest is affected, we will have to revise our neutrality. We have the right now to wait to see what is the issue, but if the issue is free people versus arbitrary government, then America can make but one choice, the speaker declared.

Mrs. Carol Turner and Susan Ellen Duvall will accompany at the piano.

Four Bad Checks Cashed in Carmel Amount to $64

The peninsula was papered with bad checks last week-end and Carmel got its share—four worthless checks for $16—and Carmel business people were out a total of $64.

Carmel police intimated the check writer is known to police authorities and that it is expected to be only a matter of time before he is apprehended.

Approximately 15 checks were cashed on the peninsula and one in Watsonville, so far as police know. In Carmel the writer used the reportedly ficititious name of "Paul Davis", but other aliases elsewhere.

Altogether the total amount of all bad checks aws close to $200. They were cashed last Saturday after banks closed.

Knox and McGaw Return For Carmel Drama Series

Returning to Carmel for an evening after more than a year, Emma Knox and Baldwin McGaw gave their first of a new series of dramatic duets before an almost full Filmarte theater on Tuesday, and with their "Peg of Drury Lane" topped a pleasing program of legitimate theater.

Especially was the dressing room scene of "Peg" a highlight, with more spontaneity than any of the balance of the program, as Miss Knox as Peg berated the affected and vain David Garrick. The portrayal of Rosalind was fresh and vivacious.

One of the most anticipated portions was "Valhalla", adapted from Mitzi Eaton's prize piece written for Mr. and Mrs. McGaw, dealing with Richard Wagner and devotion of Cosima Liszt von Bulow. This provided good material for the portrayal of a well known character.

McGaw, in the opening duet, played Disraeli in a scene which recalls George Arliss, with Miss Knox representing a fascinating Russian spy, Mrs. Travers, in an intrigue the historical circumstances were over possession of the Suez canal—with all the implications with which fraught, of interest in the light of present-day maneuvers for world power.

"The Loom of Allah" was an interlude of Persian perfidy against a western setting. McGaw's change from the bent and shriveled Disraeli to the tall and fierce-eyed Persian was striking.

Returning after an 18,000-mile tour of the United States, the McGaws are still fresh. They will be seen again on Tuesday, Oct. 31, and Friday, Nov. 17, at the Filmarte theater. Their present series is sponsored by Miss Laura Dierssen.

The second program will be "No Time for Comedy" by S. N. Behrmann, and the last of the three "Robert's Wife" by St. John Ervine.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

This is letter week in this column, with our foreign correspondents returning various reports from far corners of the world to their friends in Carmel.

From Genoa, Italy, we hear from Albert Leon Van Houtte, former instructor in English at the University at Los Angeles, amateur actor, and a Carmelite of long-standing. He is now assistant steward on a vessel bound for New York from Mediterranean waters.

Van Houtte writes as follows:

"After a rather precarious journey through the Red Sea, the Suez Canal, and especially from Alexandria to Naples, our much-painted flagship arrived safe. Cruisers, submarines and battle wagons spied on us from here and there en route. Naples, with old Vesuvius smoking and throwing out small jets of fire, presented quite a wartime preparation. Deep, heavy wire netting closed the harbor of Naples. After a cautious opening of part of this netting, the Italian pilot sailed us safely to our pier beside a vicious-looking cruiser.

"We arrived in Naples after sundown. Here we disembarked about 50 young Swiss who came from Alexandria, being called home for military service. These Swiss will take a train to Switzerland. Many Americans embarked here. Much cargo from India, America and Egypt taken off here for Italy. Natives appear quite concerned, in fact fearful of the future, not knowing just when they will become embroiled in the European fracas.

"Left Naples about 1 a. m. for Genoa, passing cruisers, subs here and there. Sardinia, Corsica and the noted island of Elba cast their sombre-shadowed hills on the horizon. Our ship is alive with identification. There can be no mistaking it for anything but an American ship. Huge American flags are painted on the two forward hatches and one on one of the after hatches. At night a large American flag unfurls to the breeze with a large spotlight on it.

"We arrived (in Genoa) yesterday at about 5 p. m., again meeting battlewagons, etc., all about us. Near us is the huge passenger liner Augustus, Italy's pride, that sails this week for South America. Two piers from us is the luxurious liner, Conte di Savoia, that sails at noon today for New York, carrying over 2000 Americans fleeing Europe. I'm expecting this letter to make that liner.

"We are leaving here about 5 p. m. today (Sept. 15) carrying an overcapacity of Americans. We can accommodate only about 140 in cabins. We are taking on about 300. That means filling the ocial hall, the smoking room and decks with cots . . Censorship is very strong."

Van Houtte has since returned to New York on the President Adams, and, 'tis said, he plans to go to South America.

Comes word of Johnnie Nye, who went to China with Ronald Johnson, leaving Carmel nearly two years ago. Nye, whose father was connected with the Carmel post office, was a well known Carmelite and news of his activities, especially in the present unusual circumstances, will be of interest to friends as well as others. He is a valued employe of the Yee Tsoong Tobacco company, after many varied experiences.

Nye writes as follows

"I suppose the European war news has keept our situation (flooding of Tientsin) out of the papers, but actually it is a disaster comparable to the San Francisco fire. Tientsin is a city of about two million people and except for the Italian concession, it is entirely under four or more feet of water. The entire country is flooded and I came here (to Peitaiho) on one of the last trains to get through.

"I stayed in Tientsin three days during the flood, trying to do what I could, and then was ordered away by the company. It certainly is a mess there. The water is all mixed in with sewage, as if a Chinese city wasn't dirty enough anyway, and you can imagine what a strong constitution it took to wade and at times to swim through the streets. I hear disease is beginning to take its toll now though I have had no bad effects except a huge appetite. I am getting in as good shape physically as possible so I can go back when the time comes with the best chance of not getting sick. Innoculations, etc., will be another aid.

"News of any kind is scarce here. The European situation has us all upset, of course, but our Tientsin worries sort of crowd that in the background. One funny result of the Russo-German pact is that the Japanese seem to be going out of their way to insult Germans now instead of Britishers.

"The loss of life among the Chinese must be tremendous alreaedy and winter is coming on. Disease and starvation is going to decimate the population I fear. I must admire these poor devils. In spite of having lost homes, families and food, they remain cheerful and courageous. It is indeed a wonderful thing to witness—if they were only like this in all things!

"I am at present at one of the nicest summer resorts in China. It is among some hills on the seashore. Like Bermuda there are no automobiles. Rickshaws, donkeys and bicycles are used to get around in. I swim and cycle and walk every day in the Lotus hills nearby, stopping for tea at the teahouse near the summit. Quite the country gentleman! At night there is usually a party or picnic or dancing. It is not bad being a refugee under such circumstances.

"I must be getting blasé about these disasters, etc. For the life of me, they seem as ordinary and commonplace as eating. If such a thing happened at home we would talk about it for years, but since the first couple of days here I haven't heard the flood mentioned. Life in China is just one thing after another. Everyone is used to such things and don't think much about them."

And, indeed, Johnnie Nye is able to acclimate himself to the point of taking the easy Chinese view of disaster, to judge by his letter!

Introducing Marken Erckenbrack Hennessy, sculptress and painter whose varied talents and interests extend to ceramics, pottery, woodblocks, surgical drawing, design and decoration, who has been a visitor in Carmel and may soon become a permanent addition to the peninsula's extensive colony of creative workers.

Youthful, blue-eyed and alert, Mrs. Hennessy has just returned from a South American cruise aboard a McCormick Line freighter, the West Kamargo, of two and a half months, and a stay in Rio de Janeiro which has filled her with as much enthusiasm as readers of the recent National Geographic Magazine article on Rio. Buenos Aires likewise was a city of interest for her, modern and yet European, spectacular and clean.

The beaches of Rio, with warm salt water swimming and gentle surf, appealed especially to Mrs. Hennessy who grew up with a water-loving background in the State of Washington. She attended the University of Washington, helped earn her way through with medical drawing, newspaper writing and sketches, and woodblocks. For two seasons there, she studied with the famous sculptor, Archipenko, probably the best in America, and won a first prize for sculpture at Washington and an oil prize in New York even then.

She also illustrated in color and black and white a children's book, "Little Bay Creatures", written by Elizabeth Willis.

Not only does she find exercise and interest in many varied forms of art, but she even extends her scope to doing decorations for parties. "I'm always eager to tackle any problem in art from decorations for parties to designs for architects", she declares. Add to her list of activities, helping architects design small houses and even furniture.

"Im practical as well as artistic", she tells you.

A grizzly bear skull, one of 17 discovered in 1882 by Lloyd Tevis, Sr., in a shack on what is now the George Gordon Moore ranch, has been loaned to the University of California Museum of Vertebrate Zoology by his son, Lloyd Tevis, Jr., of Carmel.

The senior Tevis did not remove any of the skulls at that time, but three years later he returned to the cabin and found 11 of the skulls remaining. He chose the largest and finest one to add to his collection of zoological specimens, and this skull is the one his son has placed temporarily in the museum in Berkeley. It is one of seven in the museum, but is better preserved than any of the rest.

The cabin in which the skull was discovered was only nine miles from Carmel in the Santa Lucias.

WAR RELIEF QUOTA ADDED TO RED CROSS ROLL CALL

More than 50 Carmel women are busily engaged in rolling surgical bandages and dressings for Red Cross overseas service, at the war relief headquarters in old Carmel Bank building on Ocean avenue.

The local Red Cross chapter accepted a quota of $500 in materials for this work and, under the chairmanship of Mrs. John W. Dickenson, the work is proceeding rapidly. In connection with the war work, a knitting department under Mrs. Jordan and a sewing department headed by Miss Nan McCormick are preparing refugee garments for those in need in the Balkan countries.

All of this work is being cleared through International Red Cross, with headquarters at Geneva, Switzerland.

Norman H. Davis, chairman, of the American Red Cross, is sending a delegation to Europe to study and report on the needs of the war-torn countries. The delegation consists of Ernest J. Swift, vice-chairman in charge of insular and foreign operations; Wayne C. Taylor of Chicago, formerly assistant secretary of the U. S. treasury, and James T. Nicholson, formerly director of the Chicago Red Cross chapter and now director of the Junior Red Cross. The sum of $250,000 has already been appropriated to meet immediate war needs.

The war relief quota will be added to the local relief budget by Carmel chapter and raised through subscriptions during the period of the November Roll Call. In this manner two separate campaigns for funds will be avoided.

PROPER USE OF ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENT IS IMPORTANT

"Underwriters Approved" or "Underwriters Label" may be the tag on wiring or the stamp on electrical appliances—toaster, iron, coffee percolator or washing machine—but it stands for the approval of the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., only for specific use. This is announced in connection with National Fire Prevention Week, Oct. 8-14.

Abuse of such wiring or appliances, overloading them beyond their capacities or design, material, or size, is frequently the cause of fire from a seldom expected source. The average housewife, in fact, is little inclined to think of electricity in terms of fire, as well as heat and light. Yet 11 to 16 per cent of all city fires can be attributed to this cause alone.

Thus it is that the honest and altruistic efforts of the Underwriters, exercised through their chief laboratory in Chicago and their branch laboratories in San Francisco and New York, are defeated and the work of the 21 field inspectors cast aside by the thoughtless misuse of electrical equipment.

So, too, is the good work of the International Association of Electrical Inspectors, one of the 34 groups that have a part in formulating the National Electrical Code, and the only group that represents the public interest and charged with the protection of the public, is lost—through indifference, ignorance, or thoughtlessness.

Most of this indifference is based on a lack of understanding, electrical inspectors declare. The housewife may connect a washing machine with a lighting cord—too light to bear the current and lacking in sufficient insulation to stand the heat created when the quarter-horsepower motor tries to pull its necessary current over the wire. The wire, accordingly, heats up, becomes red hot, and the insulation material bursts into flame. Had the proper size of electric cord been used, built for the current needed by the motor, everything would have gone well and the work of the Underwriters would not have been in vain.

Thus attention should be given to the use to which various approved materials and equipment are put. Be sure that the label appears both on wire and also on appliances. Unscrupulous manufacturers may, for instance, use wire bearing the "Underwriters Label" or "Underwriters Approved" tags with an unapproved appliance which bears no corresponding label. This is often done to intentionally mislead the public.

So once again the intention of the National Electrical Code is thwarted, the code which sets up minimum standards for electrical installations deisgned to guarantee reasonable safety to users of electrical current and appliances, but which does not presume to require the most efficient or complete installation possible.

This code has the object of protecting property, your home, place of business, or the plant in which you work, and of protecting you from fire and the dangers incidental to the use of electric current, through its standards.

Inspection work, measuring electrical products against these standards, is as follows:

Wires are tested for electrical resistance of the insulation and for tensile strength; washing machine and other motors are tested for safety, horsepower rating, and general suitability for the work they must do; domestic toasters and coffee percolators, irons, etc., are tested for safety of electrical insulation.

It is through this work that the electrical equipment you use is made safe for you and your property protected from fire when the correct "approved" wiring and appliances are installed in accordance with the provisions of the National Electrical Code.

WHAT ABOUT NEUTRALITY?

There is a strong movement, headed by President Roosevelt himself, to change this nation's neutrality laws to enable us to sell the actual implements of war to the nations of Europe now engaged in conflict. There have been many reasons for their actions advanced by both the proponents and opponents of this plan.

One of the most important expressed by those who favor revision of our neutrality laws is the boom for American business that would result. In connection with this, there arises a number of questions. Your editor does not attempt at this point to answer them, but he passes a few of them on for your consideration. Here they are:

Has any civilized people the moral right to be prosperous from the sale of materials specifically designed to increase the misery of other people?

Can economic problems, arising from excesses following one war, be solved by the prosperity that arises from the sale of war materials to carry on another war?

Are the proponents of revision of our neutrality laws hoping that by absorption in foreign problems our domestic problems will either cease to exist or be forgotten?

Can an economic system that is bolstered by war be regarded as the permanent one under which we shall all live in peace and happiness?

What shall we do after the war has ended and we again attempt to readjust our economic life to peace-time affairs?

Can we countenance a move to make our system dependent upon destruction of property and slaughter of people?

These are questions that deserve consideration. There are many more phases to our neutrality problem than these, for we may be sure that others will sell war materials if we don't. But do we want such money? Can we afford to correct temporarily our present economic disjointedness in the hope that when we have to work on the problem again some magic formula to solve it will have been discovered? And, again, do we have the moral right to profit from the misery of others?

As a people, we of the United States are peace-loving and sympathetic. Those qualities are often taken advantage of by cynical foreign diplomats and propagandists. They concentrate on making us cry for the misery being suffered by their side. And we do cry; that's the nice thing about us.

But this time, we're going to look beyond the propaganda. We're going to remember those days of twenty years ago and what came after. The members of the American Legion, in their convention in Chicago, cried with the voices of men who have been through it, against war. That's a cry which must be heeded.

And the blandishments of a few extra pennies in the till are not going to color our minds.

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

Attention is called to National Fire Prevention Week, October 8-14. In this connection, Fire Chief Robert G. Leidig of Carmel urges public cooperation in fire prevention, especially in the matter of chimney fires.

According to Mr. Leidig, the National Board of Fire Underwriters reports an average of 32,000 fires per year caused by dirty and defective chimneys with a loss estimated at $25,000,000, besides an unestimated loss of life.

In Carmel, Mr. Leidig states, national conditions are duplicated in miniature. The fire chief reports that the Carmel Fire Department has responded to 22 chimney fire calls in the past three years, and that, in spite of the efficiency of the Carmel department, there has been a loss from these fires of $469.

There is another loss, however, which is not counted in this toll. According to Mr. Leidig's estimate, every such fire call costs the taxpayers of the City of Carmel at least $25, or $550 for the chimney fire calls of the last three years. The total cost, therefore, to the community was $1019, chargeable almost entirely to neglect.

Mr. Leidig issues the following reequest in this connection: "Carmel's volunteer firemen are ready, night or day to respond to calls and to do their best to protect your property from fire. Will you, fellow citizens of Carmel, cooperate by eliminating such fire hazards as are due to neglect: dirty chimneys, accumulations of pine needles on roofs, paper, excelsior and other inflammable trash in attic or basement?"—F. L.

THE WORKMAN

Who was the artist sculptured all the nave,
The goats and maidens dancing on the frieze,
The rounded barrel and Diogenes,
The fluted moulding and the architrave?
Did he toss back his hair, and was he grave,
Intent upon his work and when the breeze
Came ruffling in with talk of ships and sea,
Did he look up and whistle off a stave,
And, as the light was fading, put away
His tools and with a shout plunge in the street
To cross the Arno yellow with the flood,
Stopping to watch a juggler, or a treat
Of puppets in a booth, glad to delay,
Knowing his work was done and it was good?

—BEULAH MAY, in Lyric West.

The last white rose has slowly broken bud
And opened shallow-curving petals free
To make a chalice for the sun to flood
Against the swept blue acres of the sea.

The window limits sternly with a square
And rules a rigid circumstance around
The wide infinitude of sea and air
That cannot make a picture until bound.

In dual mood I see how art contrives
To capture beauty with a pane of space,
That in the troubled sequence of our lives
A moment not of time be given place;

Here in immortal portraiture is cast
The archetype of roses in the last.

—DORA HAGEMEYER.

RECOGNITION

We stood together on the windy hill-top . . .
Down from the empty sky suddenly
Swept a glittering curve of gulls
Over the brown plough-lands below us
Stabbing us with its scimitar of beauty.
Then, looking in your face,
I, who before had been blind to you
Saw you at last,
Who are kin to all brave, free things,
Gull . . . hill-top
And the bright swift sword of loveliness
That cleaves men's hearts.

—JOAN RAMSEY.

ETERNITY

Eternity! we say the word
Upon a moment's breath
But why does not the heart stand still
Poised between life and death?

How can the lips move peacefully
About this awesome word
When time is rent from end to end
By one cleft of a sword!

—ANON.

WE CALL IT AN OUTRAGE!

Although the people of California and ourselves of Carmel especially were assured long ago that Point Lobos State Reserve would be protected from the depredations of man, this week it has again been "ravaged" by the Hollywood moving picture industry —just as it was years ago when "almost sacred" cypress groves were threatened and valuable topsoil was denuded of its protecting chaparral by the trampling of hordes of moving picture extras and assistants.

The filming of "Rebecca" on the peninsula has brought about this "incident", first since efforts were made several years ago to safeguard one of the two original Monterey cypress forests and magnificent Point Lobos from the harm so often resulting from man's arrival in a virgin land.

An outline of the rules to so protect Point Lobos was drawn up by the State park commissioners with the assistance of skilled landscape architects several years ago after the park area had been surveyed from the air to show what damage had already been done. These aerial surveys showed where such pictures as Erich von Stroheim's "Foolish Wives" were filmed. There were, and still are, bare, wind-blown dunes where the minions of Hollywood implanted their footprints on the sands of time.

As a result of this research, Hollywood studios were barred from taking anything more than background shots. Today, however, with changes on the State park commission, things are different and, in the present case, the rules are being ignored. A Hollywood studio has been allowed to send in sound trucks, cut a swath estimated to be six feet wide and a hundred feet long through protecting cover, and reportedly take other than purely background scenes; and all this in an area within the park especially set aside as a cypress sanctuary.

From this sanctuary park visitors have been excluded to protect the ground in its natural state, to permit the healthy growth of the cypress and the survival of cypress seedlings, and to save the area from erosion; yet a Hollywood company, armed with an order from the State park commission, can enter this area and go about its profitable business, no matter how destructive it may be to what Carmel regards as one of the blessed adjuncts of this region and one of the most beautiful natural spots of the whole Pacific Coast.

It might be well to urge the State park commissioners to refuse all future entry of Point Lobos to motion picture companies, for background as well as other filming, and to make this order lasting.—F. L.

Another Fire Tragedy

Next time it may be you. Who would be responsible if fire destroyed your home and snuffed out the lives of those dear to you, tonight.

1000 homes and 41 lives is the fire demon's daily toll. Your home and the lives of your loved ones may figure in tomorrow's fire tragedies, unless you do something about it today.

The average home has 75 or more fire hazards in it at all times—that means 75 danger points, where fire may burst into flames at any time of the day or night.

Men trained to spot fire dangers will make a fire hazard survey of your property: show you where all the fire dangers are, how you can eliminate unecessary dangers and how to protect against the others.

Help Prevent Fires

So many of us, by taking thought, can avoid the danger of fire. Many of the causes of fire can be removed. Faulty wiring, misuse of electrical equipment, dirty chimneys, accumulated rubbish, careless use and storage of inflammable fluids and materials, pine needles on roofs, etc., are a few of the things which make fire possible. All wiring should be checked regularly, attics and basements should be kept clear of rubbish, chimneys should be cleaned annually, gasoline and cleaning fluids should be handled with due respect and kept only in tightly sealed containers. A handy fire extinguisher should always be kept in the home.

Cause: Faulty Wiring

Only an expeienced expert is qualified to check electrical wiring and connections correctly. Electrical apparatus and wires should be checked regularly to avoid dangers like this. On all new installations, repairs and checkups, rely on the competent services of trained electrical engineers — it will save you money.

William S. Hart in 'Tumbleweeds' Back at Filmarte

The most famous single feature on the Chicago World's Fair and the San Francisco Fair is the attraction on the Filmarte screen Friday and Saturday. It is Sally Rand, world-famed dancer, starred in "Sunset Murder Case", who is proving that acting is one of her talents just as definitely as the terpsichorean art.

Also playing Friday and Saturday is James Dunn in "Shadows Over Shanghai."

"Streets of New York", which plays Sunday and Monday at the Filmarte with Jackie Cooper in the starring role, deals with the American Way, demonstrating that from rags to riches is still possible in this country at least.

Sergei Eisenstein, noted director of "Thunder Over Mexico", whose latest epic, "Alexander Nevsky" comes to the Filmarte Tuesday and Wednesday, makes no bones about the present-day significance of his XIIIth Century Russian story and significantly shows the disastrous defeat suffered by crusading Teutonic knights when they attempted to conquer the northern city-states of medieval Russia.

The return to the screen with full sound effects of "Tumbleweeds", the great William S. Hart Western epic of silent picture days marks a red-letter event in film annals. Like that famous production of an earlier American pioneer era, "The Covered Wagon," the Hart masterpiece stands out in bold relief as a marvelous record of a unique period in United States history. It will be at the Filmarte next Thursday only.

William S. Hart who returns in the stirring old-time Western screen hit, "Tumbleweeds", which plays next Thursday evening only at the Filmarte Theater. Here he is "guns an' all!"

Don Cossacks Triumph With Delightful Music

By FRANCIS L. LLOYD

Carmel's winter season of music opened to the rousing songs of the General Platoff Don Cossacks on Monday evening with a packed Sunset auditorium resounding to enthusiastic applause that called for the traditional "Song of the Volga Boatmen." This the Don Cossacks rendered in a style of their own, less as the pulsating Volga bargemen's chanty, but rather as a choir would sing it in vaulted halls.

The excellent work of the choir itself was only exceeded by the fine voices of the soloists. To round out the evening's program, the Russian dancers performed national dances, including the difficult dagger dance of the Caucasian Cossacks, thrilling as it was fiery.

One of the most beautiful songs was "Two Guitars" for the perfection with which the simple Russian Gypsy melody was sung; and, while the program was delightfully varied with such numbers as the New Zealand Maori farewell song, "Hay-Re-Ra", it shone most in the Russian religious works in which the Don Cossacks excel as a choir capable of subtle perfection.

The religious songs were a thing apart and well worth the price of admission. "Save Thy People, O God", feelingly sung, was a high spot, while "Those Evening Bells", elegy in which the bell tones were imitated, was a sound poem without flaw.

Very rarely did the Cossacks fail to maintain their precise, military atmosphere, which they so pleasingly cast aside when the popular dance closed the curtain, and only the apparent prevalence of colds marred their otherwise highly successful performance. One or two hoarse voices alone indicated that the choir was not entirely at its best.

Superb in songs of religious meaning, the Cossacks proved versatile when it came to such sprightly numbers as the "Platoff Song", Cossack military musical toast to their leader. This touched the humor of the audience and provoked repeated demands for encores.

Altogether is was a most successful evening for the Cossacks and their enthusiastic audience. It was also a success for the Carmel Art Institute which will benefit by the profits, and Kit Whitman, Art Institute director, is to be complimented on her sure judgment in bringing the Cossacks to Carmel.

Republican Women's Club to Hear Talk by Arthur M. Free

Former Congressman Arthur M. Free of San Jose will be the speaker before the meeting of the Republican Women's Club at Pine Inn next Monday evening at 8 o'clock.

The speaker's subject will be "Can the Republican Party Re-establish Prosperity in this Country?"

'Bachelor Mother', Lady of Tropics' Carmel Features

Carmel Theater screen offerings over the week-end are "Bachelor Mother" with Ginger Rogers and David Niven, showing today and tomorrow, and "Lady of the Tropics", featuring Hedy Lamarr and Robert Taylor, which is to be seen Sunday to Tuesday.

Hailed as a top comedy romance, "Bachelor Mother" brings Miss Rogers in the role of a department store sales girl and displays her flair for comedy recently appreciated in "Vivacious Lady" and "Stage Door." Niven, on the other hand, as an adamant store executive is seen in a refreshing departure from his roles in "Wuthering Heights" and "Dawn Patrol." A hilarious mix-up over a baby forms the axis about which "Bachelor Mother" revolves.

Indo-China, with its mystery, intrigue and mingled races, is the setting for "Lady of the Tropics", in which Miss Lamarr makes her long-awaited debut for MGM following her sensational triumph in "Algiers." Lavish Oriental settings form a background for the story of a beautiful Eurasian who hopes to leave the country and to establish herself as a Frenchwoman. She is prevented from leaving the country by Delaroch, portrayed by Joseph Schildkraut, who is madly in love with her. This complication has a tensely dramatic climax.

4th Street Storm Drain Project Now Completed

Announcement of the completion of the San Antonio-Fourth street storm sewer job by Commissioner of Streets Clara Kellogg at Wednesday evening's council meeting caused no furore, and yet this was in itself worthy of more than passing note.

The fact that $1900 is now returnable to the city as well makes completion of the storm water drain especially welcome at a time when city finances are none too strong.

This $1900, representing ten per cent of the total cost of the $19,000 WPA project, is now due the city from notes given by Miss Elizabeth McClung White, sand dune owner, and the Misses Colvin, owners of a residence to the north of the drain.

Miss White will benefit by having a driveway over the drain and the Misses Colvin through the diversion of winter runoff which poured heavily down the Fourth street gulch.

The city put up $4000 of the $19,000 and is therefore reimbursed for nearly 50 per cent of its outlay.

This storm sewer is one of a system necessitated by the growth of Carmel with attendant clearing of land and cutting of roadways, causing heavier runoff through more definite channels. Its completion marks a milestone in the civic career of Miss Kellogg who will retire from office in the spring.

Other portions of a master system of channels for winter runoff must be attended to in time, including Carpenter street, Junipero, and several other courses which bear much of the flood burden.

Bankers Foresee Danger Lurking in $30 Thursday

Outlining dangers of the "$30 Thursday" proposition on the November ballot, J. E. Abernethy and C. L. Berkey, bank managers of Carmel, this week issued the following statement:

"There are a great many people in California who say, 'We know that the warrants under the 'Ham and Eggs' plan will fail, just as they did in the province of Alberta and in Colorado. So why worry about it? Let the measure pass, and the warrants fail, and that will be the end of the crazy scheme.'

"It so happens, however, that under Proposition No. 1, there are other measures that would financially ruin California, even with the warrants declared unconstitutional, or should they fail to circulate."

One point particularly did the bankers stress. This is the 3% gross income tax, which is a part of Proposition No. 1, entirely separate from the warrant proposal. The "Ham and Eggs" act provides a maximum of 3 per cent gross income tax; said tax to be levied upon the gross income of every person, firm and corporation, with incomes up to $3000 per year exempted.

The 3 per ecnt gross income tax, which will practically triple taxation, will have the following effects upon California, bankers believe:

1.—It will serve to drive out the invested wealth of this state. Wealthy individual investors will move out of the state. Many corporations will move out of the state to escape this tax, along with the others that are incorporated under Proposition No. 1, namely, the sales tax, net income tax, and use tax.

2—As it drives out wealth from the state, so will it keep people from moving to the state, including wealthy individuals who would come here to live. Likewise, it will keep new enterprises out of the state because any common-sense executive would prefer to have his plant some place else, and to do an interstate business in California. Certainly the out-of-state farmers and producers and manufacturers could most favorably compete with residents of California, inasmuch as they will not have this exorbitant tax to pay.

The only result, they see, can be reduced industrial activity in the state, lower income for all concerned, and mounting unemployment. And as the Act checks PWA and WPA help from the Federal Government, there will be little money available for the growing demands of relief.

From the general public standpoint, bankers declare, it is the consumer that is most involved, and it might well be considered that the consumer is the housewife. Because the 3 per cent gross income tax is a tax that pyramids, it inevitably leads to higher prices for all products produced in the state. Even the Los Angeles promoters of this act recognize that inflation will come because of this tax.

If inflation should ever reach the bounds in California that it did in parts of Europe after the war—and it is the history of money that worthless paper, such as the warrants, drives out good money—then picture a similar situation existing here.

In some quarters there exists the impression that because a person has a small income he would be exempt from the 3 per cent gross income tax. This is not true, because it is a pyramiding tax it would directly and indirectly affect every consumer.

"We, as bankers, are definitely interested in protecting the welfare of our depositors and our borrowers, and unless this act is defeated it will bankrupt the State of California and bring financial misery to all its citizens," is the declaration of California's bankers.

Hallowe'en Party Planned for Kids by Business Association

The Carmel Business Association, through its president, Capt. J. Shelburn Robison, came through with an excellent suggestion Wednesday evening and received council blessing and cooperation.

It was for a municipal Hallowe'en party on one of the downtown streets, with a costume contest and possibly other events. The council readily agreed to roping off over any suitable street for the Hallowe'en party — which may, incidentally, avert a lot of mischief customary at this time.

"THE TEMPEST" NEXT

Herbert Heron will lead the reading of Shakespeare's "The Tempest" which will start next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in the Seven Arts building. A rehearsal of "Twelfth Night" is again scheduled for tomorrow afternoon at the Forest Theater. In case of rain, the venue will be the Seven Arts building.

BEACH ORDINANCE SOON

Progress is being made in the matter of the petition for an ordinance to protect Carmel beach from commercial encroachment. Capt. J. Shelburn Robison has promised the petition for next council meeting. It already bears 240 names, a comfortable margin, he stated.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller Holland of San Francisco were La Playa guests this week. Mr. Holland is United Press manager in San Francisco.
